

The Day in Which We Live - Part 1

By Aaron Smith

In February of 2020 a brother had an experience in which he saw a great ship and was told to 'batten down the hatches'. This was in reference (in hindsight now) to the coming wave/storm soon to engulf the world known as Covid. In looking back at that experience, he reminded me that the wave he saw was just the first of many that would soon come. In May of that year, on one of the zoom services we started after they shut the churches down, I was speaking about the overall day in which we lived. In this sermon God wanted us to know something else that wasn't in my notes and I had not been prepared to speak. It was this: When this dilemma is over and it appears everything would be getting back to normal, God would allow the rug to get pulled out from under us. Why? Because he wouldn't be satisfied with the response from His church. We relied too much on the world and its wisdom. We still cling to that world. There were many who realized during that time that the things of this world were nothing and they could do without them now. They left those and began to cling to Jesus. This is the response God has wanted all along. Our love affair with the world needs to end. We have to rely fully upon Christ. And so, God would continue to allow the waves to hit the boat until we were at perfect peace, much like the disciples were in Matthew 14 or Mark 6. In the presence of Christ there is perfect peace, enough peace that Peter walked on water in the midst of the storm. (...continued on April card.)

*Therefore being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ...And not only this, but we glory in tribulations also; knowing that tribulation worketh patience; And patience, experience; and experience, hope;
And hope maketh not ashamed;
because the love of God is shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost which is given unto us.*
